David Bennett
Manager, Repair Systems

David Bennett, currently manages the curation, flow and distribution of repair facility data for AAA, which is used to identify areas where the repair experience may be enhanced for both members and consumers. Additionally, David is responsible for the creation and promotion of proprietary content intended to educate consumers on a variety of high-interest automotive topics.

David, a 32-year veteran in the automotive industry, also serves as AAA's in-house expert on car-buying and driving costs, often featured in national and local media such as Forbes, USA Today and NerdWallet.

During his expansive career at AAA, David has held many positions whose work directly impacted the member experience. Most recently, leveraging his expertise to spearhead programs designed to simplify the car-buying experience for members as well as authoring and editing over 500 car reviews. Since joining AAA in 1986, David has also played an integral role in the expansion of AAA's Approved Auto Repair program, oversaw mentoring of aspiring automotive technicians and served as a technical advisor for AAA's Making Sense of Car Care book.

Outside of AAA, David is active in the automotive industry and local community as a founding member of the Automotive Executives Association as well as serving on the Seminole State College Automotive Advisory Board. He also has held several certifications from ASE and the University of Georgia International Institute of Towing and Recovery.
